

Adams, Henry. The Great Secession Winter of 1860-61 and Other Essays. Edited by George E. Hochfield. New York: A. S. Barnes, 1963.

“The Great Secession Winter of 1860-61”

Belief that secession crisis would be short-lived, 3

Upper south belief in reconstruction with cotton states out, 4

Expectation of violence at assembling of Congress not met, 4-5

Buchanan, disunionists in cabinet, Cass, Cobb, 5-6

Rumors there would be fighting in Washington, 7

Secessionists anti-Lincoln sentiment among government clerks, 7

Floyd and War Department, 7-8

Douglas, secession conspiracy, 8-9, 11

John J. Crittenden, 10

Andrew Johnson, 11

Differences among Republicans over how to deal with secession, Seward, 12

Much confusion in the House, 13

Disunion became an increasing reality, 14

Henry Winter Davis stands against secession, Know Nothings, denounced Crittenden compromise, 15-18

Jefferson Davis, 18-19

New Mexico, conciliation, Charles Francis Adams, 19

Seward influence, constitutional amendments, New Mexico, committee of 33 kept together, 19-21

Floyd, corruption in Interior department, 21

Seward as leaders of conciliators, Virginia, 21-25

Only rumors from Springfield, 25-26

Cabinet, and persistent battle in Congress, 26-27

Seward favored conciliation and opening cabinet to southern unionists, abandonment of forts, 27-28

Assessment of Seward’s course, 28-29

Influence of the slave power, 30

American republic has passed the test, 30-31

Remain essays on history and postwar topics