

Botts, John Minor. The Great Rebellion: Its Secret History, Rise, Progress, and Disastrous Failure. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1866.

Origin of the Book.— It is written at the Request of the French Consul. — The Hartford Convention not the Birthplace of Secession. — The Stigma attached to Members of that Body. — Transfer of the Odium to Abolitionism, Page 29-31.

Secession odious in the South prior to 1832. — The Richmond Enquirer of that Year on Secession. — The Editor condemns the Doctrine, 31, 32.

The Author of Secession. — John C. Calhoun the Author of Secession. — His ambitious Projects. — The Erostratus of the 19th Century, 32, 33.

Secession in 1832. — How General Jackson treated Secessionists in 1832. — "The Union must and shall be preserved, " 33.

Jackson's Proclamation. — His conscientious Discharge of his Duties. — The enthusiastic Reception of his Proclamation. — Discomfiture of the would-be Rebels, 33-36.

Passage of the Force Bill by Congress. — Increase of the coercive Power of the President. — Public Sentiment in favor of strong Measures against Secession. — The Unconstitutionality of Secession proved, 36, 37.

An Argument against Disunion. — Extract from a Speech of Mr. Botts in 1860. — The Union perpetual. — The Demon of Democracy at work, 37-46.

An important Note. — The Confederate States' Manifesto. — Mr. Rives's great Speech on the Force Bill. — The Tergiversation of Mr. Rives, 47-63.

Calhoun barely escapes Hanging. — Determination of General Jackson "to make Treason odious." — Calhoun saved from the Gallows by Henry Clay. — South Carolina seeks Co-operation of her " Sister States" before making a second Disunion Experiment, 63, 64.

Secession not Killed.— The Tariff Question laid aside, and that of Slavery taken up as the Lever of Agitation. — The Operation of "firing the Southern Heart" commenced. — Timid Whigs driven into the Ranks of the Southern Democracy. — Every Opponent of that Party stigmatized as an Abolitionist. — Calhoun's Address to the South Carolinians on the Subject of a Change of Tactics, Page 65, 66.

The Disunion Scheme of the Democracy. — Prescience of Mr. Botts in Regard to the Designs of the Democratic Party. — Denunciations of him by the* Democratic Press and Politicians. — Slavery the Pretext for their revolutionary Efforts to perpetuate their Power, 66-68.

The Secession Programme. — The Adoption of the 21st Rule, denying the Right of Petition to the North. — The Creation of Sectional Animosities. — Misrepresentation of the Sentiments and Objects of the Northern People by the Democratic Press of the South and their Party Confreres in the North. — Peaceful (!) Secession advocated. — Reflections on the Cost of the Secession Experiment. — The Consequences of the Success of the Rebellion, 68-71.

The Democracy Reviewed. — Aaron Burr the Father of the Party, and Thomas Jefferson the Beneficiary. — Democracy reigns for Sixty Years. — Its temporary Abdication during the Regency of Adams. — Inauguration of the System of "to the Victors belong the Spoils," under Jack-son. — Southern Presidents for thirty Years. — The Tariff Question. — Calhoun's Experiment. — The Van Buren Regime. — The Whig Triumph in 1840. — Tyler's Treachery. — The Annexation of Texas. — The Mexican War. — The Wilmot Proviso. — The Compromise of 1850. — The Repeal of the Missouri Compromise, 71-82.

The Rebellion Foreshadowed. — Speeches and Letters of Mr. Botts in 1844. — The Object of the Texas Annexation Scheme. — Exposures of the Designs of the Southern Democratic Leaders, 82-95.

Efforts to extend Slavery. — Calhoun as Secretary of State. — How John Quincy Adams came to join the Abolitionists. — The Charleston Courier tells Tales out of School, 95-97.

The strict Discipline in the Democratic Ranks. — The thorough Organization of the Democracy. — The complete Control of the Masses by the Leaders. — "The cohesive Power of public Plunder." — The Democratic Masses the Dupes of Demagogues, 97-99.

The Wilmot Proviso. — The Return of Mr. Clay to the United States Senate. — The Compromise Measures of 1850 a severe Blow to the Democracy. — The Standard of Rebellion raised in the Cotton States in 1851. — Jeff Davis the Secession Candidate for Governor of Mississippi. — He is defeated by Foote, the Union Nominee. — Georgia follows Suit by electing Howell Cobb on the Union Platform. — A lofty Summersault by the Democratic Party, Page 99-101.

The Extremists of both Sections united in Action. — The "Fire-eaters" and "Fanatical Abolitionists" voting together. — An illustrative Anecdote of John P. Hale. — He votes with Hunter, of Virginia, 101, 102.

Agitation the Object in View. — The Abolitionists seek to make Proselytes in the North, and the Secession Democracy to stir up the Passions of the Southern People. — Disunion sought by both, the one to get rid of Slavery, the other to regain lost Power, 102-104.

Secessionists become Filibusters. — The Expedition to Cuba. — Partial Revival of the African Slave-trade. — The Nicaraguan War. — Lopez and Walker, and their Men, Victims to the Cause of Secession. — 104, 105.

The Southern Commercial (!) Conventions. — These Conventions mere "Primary Meetings" of the Secessionists. — The Richmond Examiner anxious for the fait accompli of Secession. — Mr. Botts attends a Convention at Memphis, and spies the Wolf beneath the Sheep's Clothing, 105, 106.

The Calm before the Storm. — The temporary Adjustment of pending Differences between the North and South. — Agitation lulled. — The Democracy on the Look-out for new Causes of Discontent. — A Virginia Mason begins to build a dividing Wall, 106, 107.

Death of John C. Calhoun. — The Legacy he left his Country. — Death of Clay and Webster. — The Giants of Kentucky and Massachusetts leave a Vacuum. — A mental Pigmy from New Hampshire occupies the Presidential Chair. — Pierce and Douglas made Catspaws of by the Democratic Leaders. — A New England Pettifogger on the Democratic Ticket defeats a Virginian Patriot on the Union Platform, 107-109.

Union Whigs turn Democratic Secessionists. — The Toombs's, Stephens's, Faulkners, etc., of the Whig Party, swell the Democratic Ranks, 109, 110.

The Fugitive Slave Law. — Its obnoxious Features. — Quiet temporarily restored. — Retirement of John P. Hale. — The Democracy dissatisfied. — The Union to be saved only by the Election of the Democracy to Power, 110-112.

The Democracy to rule, or Disunion to follow. — Rebellion to have been Inaugurated in 1856 if Fremont had been Elected. — Buchanan's Election postpones the Denouement for four Years. — The Election of Lincoln ends the Melodrama and begins the Tragedy, 112, 113.

Development of the Conspiracy. — The Capital to have been seized, and Lincoln assassinated by a Mob from New York, Baltimore, and Richmond. — The North to have "smelt Southern Powder and felt Southern Steel." — Toombs to have called the Roll of his Slaves on Bunker Hill. — Wise advocates Fighting for his Rights in the Union when in Possession of Washington. — The Attack on Fort Sumter premature. — The great Excitement in the North, East, and West occasioned by the Insult to the Flag in Charleston Harbor. — An Obstacle in the Way not thought of. — The Unity of the North unexpected. — The Northern Allies of Southern Traitors quail before it. — The Secession Speeches of the ex-Unionist, Alexander H. Stephens — "On to Washington!" his Watchword, Page 113-116.

Speech of Alexander H. Stephens at Richmond in 1861. — Extract from the Richmond Dispatch of April 23, 1861. — An Editorial from the Richmond Sentinel of November 2, 1863, Proof of the Conspiracy to remove Lincoln. — Testimony of General James Wilson. — Mr. Botts's Efforts to foil the Traitors. — He exposes their Designs to General Scott. — An important "Note," giving Statistics of the Transfer of Arms and Munitions of War from Northern to Southern Arsenals, 117-121.

A retrospective Glance. — Quarrels among the Democracy over the Spoils in 1854. — More Agitation needed for the Campaign of 1856. — A private Meeting of Secessionists in Washington. — The Repeal of the Missouri Compromise determined upon. — Mason and Hunter, of Virginia, start the Ball, 122-124.

The Repeal of the Missouri Compromise. — Pierce and Douglas won over to this iniquitous Scheme by the hopes of Self-aggrandizement. — The Prize of a Presidential Nomination in 1856 the tempting Bait. — The hungry Whigs sell their Birthright for a Mess of Pottage, 124-126.

John Bell, of Tennessee. — The Unionism of Bell tested. — He is found to be made of inferior Metal. — Bell's Speech at Memphis in 1859. — He is willing to join the Republicans to save the Union. — His Recreancy when Nothing was to be made by Unionism, 126, 127.

History of the Missouri Compromise. — Extracts from Mr. Botts's African Church Speech in 1856. — The Slavery Question when the Constitution was framed. — Slavery then prohibited in all the Territory of the United States. — The Question of the Status of the newly-acquired Territory of Louisiana. — The Compromise on the Admission of Missouri. — No Slave States to be made out of Territory north of 36° 40'. — Monroe's Cabinet, including Calhoun, regard the Compromise as a strictly constitutional Measure. — It is considered a Southern Triumph, Page 127-133.

Repeal of the 21st Rule. — Calhoun at Work again stirring up sectional Strife. — The Right of Petition in Congress. — Mr. Botts makes a Stand in favor of it against a Southern Majority. — A Review of the agitating Questions which grew out of the Repeal of the Missouri Compromise. — The Annexation of Texas. — The Admission of Oregon. — The Inconsistency of the Democracy illustrated, 133-138.

The Compromise of 1850. — The Action of Mr. Clay. — Mr. Botts has a Conversation with Senator Foote. — Mr. Botts and Mr. Clay have a Talk together. — A Secession Convention called at Nashville. — The Jackson Resolutions in the House of Representatives. — The Names of those who voted against a Settlement of pending Difficulties. — The Contest of 1852 reviewed. — Pierce's Administration. — Mr. Botts's Charges against the Democracy. — The Cincinnati Convention. — Mr. Botts endorses Mr. Seward, 138-147.

The Kansas-Nebraska Bill. — Douglas's Remarks in New York. — A Repetition of historical Truths. — Mr. Botts on Slavery. — He declares himself no Slavery Propagandist. — He refuses to force Slavery upon the People any where. — He would not establish it in the Territories, 147-153.

The Missouri Compromise again. — Its Repeal the Origin of the Republican Party. — Mr. Botts's Letter to the National Intelligencer. — The Consequences of the Repeal predicted. — Mr. Botts's Opposition excites the Anger of the Democracy. — Governor Wise "pitches in" to him. — Wise handled without Gloves by Mr. Botts. — Very interesting Extracts. — Wise's Plagiarism, 154-162.

The Presidential Questions of 1856. — Pierce and Douglas thrown aside for Buchanan. — Fremont nearly successful. — The Party Cry of "the Election of a Democrat necessary to save the Union" a good one. — The Richmond Examiner again. — Preston Brooks makes a few Remarks. — Governor Wise proposes to take Washington. — Mr. Botts again warns the People. — The last expiring Effort of Democracy, 162-166.

The Attempt to make Kansas a Slave State. — It is a Part of the Democratic Programme to exasperate the North. — The Agitators of both Sections arraigned. — The Southern Democracy the guilty Parties. — The Iniquity of the Attempt, 166-170.

Mr. Botts's Speech in New York in 1859. — The Lecompton Swindle. — The Proceedings of the Kansas Convention. — The Outrages attempted by the Southern Democracy. — Extract from the Richmond Whig on the Subject, Page 170-177.

The John Brown Raid. — A Godsend for the Democracy. — The Excitement in Richmond. — Wise in his Glory. — The Cost of this "playing Soldier" to Virginia. — Preparations made for the Rebellion, 177-179.

The Nominations for President in 1860. — The Democratic "Powwow" at Charleston. — Breckinridge in command of the Secession Democracy. — Douglas at the Head of the "Moderate Democrats." — Bell captains the Unionists. — Lincoln musters the Republican Army of "Wide-awakes." — He wins the Battle. — The Republican Platform. — Its conservative Character, 179-181.

The Conspiracy developed. — The Treachery of Buchanan's leading Cabinet Officers. — They rob the North to arm the South. — Virginia gives a Union Vote in the Election of 1860, 181, 182.

The Election of Lincoln. — His Election the Pretext for Rebellion. — Bonfires illuminate Charleston. — A Secession Convention called in South Carolina. — Inauguration of Secession. — The firing upon the Star of the West. — The Action of Governor Letcher in Virginia. — He succumbs to the Democracy. — The illegitimate Call for the Convention, 183, 184.

The "so-called" Peace (!) Congress. — The pretended Efforts of the Democracy to obtain a peaceful Solution of the great Problem. — Proofs of their Pretense. — The Resolutions of the Peace Congress, and the Cheat played off upon the People in regard to them. — Tyler and Seddon play their "little Game," 184-189.

The Crittenden Compromise Measures. — Jeff Davis and Bob Toombs defeat their Passage. — No Compromise desired. — The Amendment to prohibit Congress from legislating on Slavery refused, 189, 190.

The Richmond Whig on Reconstruction. — The Fault not in the Constitution. — The South objects to Yankees. — They want to be "let alone." — What Preston Brooks said, 190, 191.

What Andrew Johnson said. — His Speech at Nashville in 1862. — Six Southern Senators refuse to record their Votes in order to defeat the Crittenden Compromise. — Withdrawal of the Southern States while in control of both Houses of Congress. — The North infuses to legislate against Slavery, though Secession had given them the Power, 191-193.

The Virginia Convention of 1861. — The Character of the Convention. — How Civil War in Virginia might have been avoided. — Mr. Lincoln makes an Offer to John B. Baldwin, one of the then Union Leaders of the Convention. — Mr. Lincoln offers to evacuate Fort Sumter if the Convention will adjourn sine die without passing an Ordinance of Secession. — Baldwin declines the Offer, Page 194.

Mr. Botts has an Interview with Mr. Lincoln. — The President's Message to Governor Pickens, of South Carolina. — He does not want War. — He "will make greater Sacrifices for Peace than any Man in the Country." — Mr. Botts returns to Richmond to consult with the Union Men of the Convention. — Baldwin keeps Mr. Lincoln's Offer secret. — He accepts a military Position in the Confederate Service three Days after the State secedes, 194-200.

The Virginia "State-rights" Convention. — The Secession Convention at Metropolitan Hall, Richmond. — Its Object to coerce the regular State Convention. — The Governor to be deposed and Revolution inaugurated if the Ordinance of Secession was not passed before April 20, 201-203.

The Rebellion inaugurated. — The Richmond Secessionists send a Delegate to Charleston to start the Ball of Rebellion. — Speech of Roger A. Pryor at Charleston. — The Attack on Fort Sumter commenced. — The Capture of Washington the next Thing on the Programme, 203, 204. President Lincoln's Proclamation in 1861. — The Proclamation an unfortunate Document. — The Reason why it was. — It was not properly worded, and called for too few Men. — The Union Party of the South paralyzed by it. — Mr. Botts alone raises his Voice against Secession at this critical Time, 205-208.

The Ordinance of Secession passed in Virginia. — The Vote on its Passage. — Rebellion inaugurated in Virginia. — Post-office and Custom-house seized in Richmond. — Attack on the Gosport Navy-yard and Harper's Ferry Buildings, 208, 209.

The illegal State Action of the Virginia Convention. — They adopt the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy. — The State transferred to that Government. — The Ratification of the Secession Ordinance. — The Vote a complete Farce. — The limited Powers of the Convention. — The Annexation of Virginia to the Southern Confederacy neither ratified by the People nor submitted to them for Approval, 209-211.

The Ratification of the Ordinance of Secession. — Mr. Botts refuses to ratify the Action of the Convention. — The Vote on the Question kept secret. — The Character of the Outrage committed, Page 211-213.

Mr. Botts's Efforts to prevent Civil War. — His Letter to Mr. Bates. — His Propositions repudiated. — The Excitement against him in Richmond. — Article from the Richmond Whig. — An Editorial from the Richmond Dispatch. — "Tories and Traitors," 213-216.

Mr. Botts retires from the Contest in Despair. — He might have had a high Position in the Confederacy. — He prefers a Prison in the Cause of the Union, 216, 217.

"Honest John Bell" again. — John Bell's Selfishness. — He holds to the Union as long as he thinks it profitable. — The Defection of Southern Unionists in general. — The Temptation of Offices under Jeff Davis too great to be resisted, 217, 218.

The South no Cause of Complaint. — The law-making Power of the United States Government in the Hands of the South from 1801 to 1861. — They control Congress for fifty Years. — What the Southern Democracy did in that Period. — Their last Act an Effort to destroy the United States Government in order to regain lost Power. — The Task of the Democracy finished, and their Mission ended, 218-222.

The Result of the Rebellion. — The futile Effort of five Millions of People to overthrow twenty-two Millions. — Mr. Botts, in 1861, predicts the disastrous Failure of the Rebellion. — What Democracy has done. — They turn Southern Fields into Grave-yards, cover the Land with Mourning, fill the South with Widows and Orphans, and impoverish the entire South. — All this done to perpetuate the Power of the Democratic Party, 222-224.

Conclusion. — Reflections on the State of the Country. — Mr. Botts declares the Union to be "the God of my Idolatry on Earth." — The Rebellion the greatest Crime since the Crucifixion of the Savior, 224-226.

CONTENTS OF THE APPENDIX.

The great Strike for higher Wages. — More of its History. — The Vallandigham Conspiracy. — The Knights of the Golden Circle. — General Gantt's Testimony. — General McClellan escapes the "Potter's Hands." — The Character of the "Strike." — Mr. Botts is advised by a "Friend" to take up the Southern Cross. — He resists the Temptation, and goes in for "the old Flag or none." — He is requested to explain his Views of the Question. — His Letter to the Alexandria Gazette in 1860, Page 227-248.

Mr. Botts's Nomination for the State Convention. — His Letter of Acceptance. — He prophesies the Consequences of Secession. — He makes an Effort to prevent Civil War, 248-257.

The Bates Letters. — Mr. Botts writes to Attorney General Bates. — He proposes to let the Cotton States have constitutional Leave to withdraw. — He thinks a short Time would satisfy them of the Folly of the Experiment. — His Object only to avoid Civil War, not to legalize Secession. — Editorial Comments of the Richmond Dispatch on his first Letter. — Mr. Bates's Reply. — The suppressed Letters of this Correspondence. — The last Letters of Mr. Botts. — He fully explains his Position. — Extracts from his Letter to the Troy Whig, 257-279.

The Particulars of Mr. Botts's Arrest. — He is lodged in a filthy negro Jail for eight Weeks. — Mr. Botts the first Victim to Loyalty in Virginia. — The prison Treatment. — The Inauguration of the Reign of Terror. — The odious Southern Conscription. — Benjamin in the Role of a "sneaking Thief," 279-281.

Mr. Botts's Letter to G. W. Randolph in 1862. — He protests against the Tyranny of his Enemies. — He demands Trial. — Plain Talk to the Confederate Secretary of War. — The Order for Mr. Botts's Removal to the Interior. — The tyrant Winder writes to him, 281-290.

Mr. Botts's official Protest. — His Reasons for protesting against his Imprisonment. — His Release from Prison. — He expects "Little Mac." — A Chapter on General McClellan. — The Ease with which he could have taken Richmond in 1862. — The great Defeat of the Rebels at Malvern Hill. — McClellan retreats from a flying Foe, 291-294.

Mr. Botts moves to Culpepper. — He purchases a Farm of 2200 Acres. — Jeb Stuart begins his Persecutions. — The Robberies of the Confederate Army. — How General Meade failed in capturing Lee's Army. — A Bull-Run Panic among the Rebels after the Battle of Kelly's Ford. — Outrageous Conduct of Stuart's Army, 294-297.

Mr. Botts's Letter to the Richmond Examiner in 1863. — A graphic Picture of the thrilling Times of '63. — His bold, defiant Language while in the Rebel Lines, 297-307.

A clear Record desired. — Mr. Botts declines the United States Senatorship of Virginia. — He hopes to be the Means of reconciling the North and South, 307-309.

Mr. Botts's Lincoln Letter.— His Opinion of Mr. Lincoln and his Administration. — An impressive Incident. — A Delegation of Ministers visit Mr. Botts and have the Letter read to them. — His Views on the Emancipation Proclamation. — What he thought of the Confiscation Act. — Mr. Botts says, "Let the Nation live, and let Slavery perish." — The Democracy of the South the Destroyers of Slavery : "Out of Evil cometh Good." — He considers the Amnesty Act a Mistake. — He contends that the States never left the Union, but that their Citizens did, Page 310-320.

The Gilmer Letter. — John A. Gilmer, of North Carolina, wants Mr. Botts to go to Washington to "stop the War." — His Answer to this Request. — A conquered Peace the only one to be had. — He refers to what Mr. Stephens said in 1860, 320-328.

The Congressional Test-oath. — Mr. Botts's Opinion solicited. — His Response to the Request. — No Doubt of the Right of Congress to impose the Oath. — None but a "religious Test-oath" prohibited by the Constitution. — Each House of Congress to be its own Judge of the Qualifications of its Members. — He tells them in September, 1865, that the Oath will not be repealed by Congress. — Though he fed the Hungry, and administered to the Sick and Wounded of the Rebel Army, as he did to those of the National Forces, he can, nevertheless, take the Oath conscientiously. — Acting the Part of the good Samaritan is not giving Aid to or having Sympathy with the Rebellion. — The second Letter on the Subject. — He clearly proves the constitutionality of the Oath, 328-339.

President Johnson's Policy of Reconstruction. — Mr. Botts's Views on the Subject. — He thought Mr. Johnson intended to make "Treason odious," and not a Virtue. — His Labors to restore Harmony to the distracted South. — He seeks Pardons for his former Persecutors, and, like the Snakes they were, they stung the Hand that saved them. — He sees Pardons bought and sold in the White House. — He exposes the Corruption to the President. — Loyal Unionists kept in the Background, while the worst Class of Rebels are allowed to take Office. — The gradual change of Rebels from humble Supplicants to tyrannical Taskmasters. — They assume Superiority over Unionists, and their Assumption is tacitly acknowledged by the President, 339-34:1.

Mr. Botts's Axioms. — Secession forbidden by the Constitution. — All Ordinances of the kind null and void. — The Absurdity of state Allegiance being paramount. — No such thing as thirty-six different Allegiances in the United States, and yet none to the Central Government. — No State has been out of the Union. — Men can go out, however, though they can not take a State out. — The Rebel Government a de facto Government, and all its Citizens who voluntarily swore Allegiance to it Aliens. — The Functions of the Rebel States suspended. — These Functions only to be restored by the law-making Power of the United States, viz., by President, House, and Senate acting together. — Properly elected and truly loyal Representatives entitled to Seats in Congress. — To withhold the Right of such to Seats would be to place loyal and disloyal on a par. — No Presidential Pardons legal until the Pardoned have been tried. — The Policy of Reconstruction to be recommenced under different Auspices ; the present Policy declared a Failure. — The unconstitutional Action of the Virginia Legislature. — Loyal Men the only Parties legally entitled to legislate in a reconstructed State, Page 341-344.

The Garnett Letters — The First Letter. — Mr. Botts is requested to "define his Position." — He does it, greatly to the Disgust of ye Traitors. — He shows the Illegality of the Action of the State Legislature of Virginia. — He quotes Mr. Johnson's Record to show what his Policy is, or should be, rather. — He analyzes the Sequel to the great Southern Strike for higher Wages. — He quotes legal Authority as to the pardoning Power of the President. — What Attorney General Wirt, of Virginia, said in 1820. — What Roger B. Taney said in 1831. — He clenches the Nail with Chief Justice Marshall's Opinion on the Subject. — Tired of being persecuted by pardoned Rebels, he declares his Intention to enter the Lists against the reconstructed Traitors alone, 344-359.

The Second Letter. — Mr. Botts gives one of his "gentle Rebukes" to Mr. Garnett. — The "Rebuke" a scorching Epistle. — The Axioms illustrated.— Mr. Botts's " Roland" for Mr. Garnett's "Oliver," 359-367.

The Third Letter. — Mr. Botts gives Evidence of the Disloyalty of the "Reconstructed." — The Conspiracy to involve the Nation in a foreign War. —The Prescience of Mr. Botts in 1841, '44, '54, and '61. — More Evidence of the Proscription of loyal People in the South. — Mr. Botts's Opinion on the Veto of the Bureau Bill, 367-375.

The Fourth Letter. — A Response to Mr. Garnett's Letter. — Mr. Botts corrects Garnett's Errors. — Explains the Test-oath to him. — The Senatorial Question. — The Axioms explained. — The President's Policy referred to. — Some pointed Questions. — Treason to be made odious, 376-384.

Mr. Botts's Plan of Reconstruction. — His Letter to Congress. — Objections to the Report of the Congressional Reconstruction Committee. — No Relief for the white Unionists of the South. — The Power to vote dependent upon the grade of Office held instead of the grade of Offense committed. — The President can not approve the Bill. — No Southern State will adopt it. — A new Oath suggested. — No one over twenty-five who voluntarily took up Arms against the United States Government to hold Office for ten Years. — A remission of forfeiture of Life, Liberty, and Property the Contingent. — Boys and young Men, together with those dragged in to Rebellion, not to be held to a Responsibility, Page 384-388.

Mr. Lincoln and his Policy. — A Tribute to the Martyred President. — The gross Injustice done Mr. Lincoln. — The Lies of the Democratic Almanac. — The Republican Platform of 1860. — Its best Plank shown. — The false Statements of partisan Publications refuted. — Democratic Efforts to " fire the Southern Heart." — Mr. Lincoln's Speech in March, 1861. — His Reply to a Committee of so-called Southern Unionists. — Their false Report thereon. — Mr. Lincoln's Message in March, 1862. — Important Memorandum of an Interview between Mr. Lincoln and several Representatives of the Border States in 1862. — Another Interview with Members of Congress in July, 1862. — He explains his Views on the Slavery Question. — Compensation for Slaves made free, and gradual Emancipation offered to the South. — The Fremont Proclamation revoked by Mr. Lincoln. — Hunter's ditto. — Mr. Lincoln's Letter to the Tribune. — The Union to be saved at all Hazards — with Slavery or without it. — Mr. Botts's Comments on Mr. Lincoln's Policy. — The Vote on the Crittenden Proposition. — An apt Quotation from President Johnson when that eminent Tennessean regarded Treason as odious, and was ready to punish Traitors, 388-402.